Understanding Risk; Embracing Treatment

- Suicide is preventable. Combining knowledge, care and compassion can make a real impact.
- Suicide is complex and influenced by many interconnected factors. Knowing the warning signs of suicide saves lives.
- Preventing suicide means understanding risk, accessing supportive proven care, and sharing hope because healing is possible.
- With the right support, people can heal, build resilience, and thrive after crisis.
- Hope and resilience grow when people feel heard. This can guide people to find strength even in their darkest moments.
- There is no “right” way to heal and recover; support should meet people where they are. Healing is personal.

Warning Signs of Suicide

- Talking about feeling hopeless or having no reason to live
- Making statements or expressing wishes to disappear or go away
- Withdrawing from friends and family
- Exhibiting sudden changes in mood or behavior
- Giving away personal belongings or saying goodbye
- Engaging in risky or self-destructive actions
- Sleeping too much or too little regularly
- Displaying a loss of interest in favorite activities
